45' (GER, ENG subs), 30' (GER)

With the turbulent turn the world is taking many are forced to leave their homelands in search of a better future. However, more and more people are fleeing to Europe. Can or will they be well accommodated?

Europe has experienced the greatest mass migration since World War II and the governments are unable to cope with the problems. In the Mediterranean, refugees are drowning because the legal paths to Europe are closed. For a long time experts have been searching for a way to save the lives being lost. This film examines the asylum and refugee policy and reports about the situations. Immigration could add value to our society; we just need to embrace it.
