Max Beckmann is a German Modernist painter whose works are the most coveted today. This film draws on a considerable amount of new materials: diaries and letters that can be dramatized as a kind of personal disclosure. There are photos of him and film material shot by him. His many self-portraits can be used as a leitmotif to document his search for truth in a chronological way. And the film recalls his many places of residence in order to illustrate his turbulent life during turbulent times.
